11. INFORMATIONAL ITEMS

- (a) Update on New Mexico NASA EPSCoR BY Director Pat Hynes

Dr. Pat Hynes gave a slide presentation on the purpose of the New Mexico NASA EPSCoR (Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research) program, which is to build the core competitive research strength in New Mexico. The additional purpose of the program is to grow technology development methods and activities for the solution of scientific and technical problems of importance to NASA. New Mexico NASA EPSCoR focuses on collaborative activities and relationships to develop long-term, self-sustaining, nationally-competitive capabilities in space and aerospace-related research. These capabilities, in turn, contribute to New Mexico's economic viability and expand the nation's base for aerospace research and development. The NASA EPSCoR RID Program (Research Infrastructure Development) awards research funds to faculty for up to $50,000 to stimulate research programs and prepare them for larger funding opportunities.

- (b) Update on Year of Sustainability (Associate Director Steve Loring)

Associate Director Loring gave an overview of the progress accomplished toward goals for the Year of Sustainability, status of Presidents Climate Commitment, definition of sustainability, and future activities.

- (c) Enrollment Report by Vice President Carmen Gonzales

Vice President Gonzales gave a presentation on the current NMSU enrollment and student demographics for undergraduate and graduate students with prior year point-in-time comparisons. The presentation concluded with upcoming recruitment cycle initiatives, changes in scholarship options, and other enrollment issues.

- (d) Space and Aerospace Research Update by Drs. Bernard McNamara and Tom Burton for Vice President Vimal Chaitanya

Dr. McNamara gave a presentation on the headquarters of the National Solar Observatory (NSO) currently located at Sunspot, NM. Over the next few years, NSO will consolidate its scientific and engineering staff to a university campus. With the support of UNM and NMT, NMSU is positioning itself to serve as its host university. NSO's research interests are broad, ranging from investigations of the internal structure and dynamics of the Sun to space weather. About 63 world-class scientists and engineers (all supported by federal funding) would come to campus. The number of high paying jobs added to southern New Mexico would be about 120. This addition would dramatically increase the national and international reputation of NMSU and would provide synergies with Los Alamos National Laboratory, Sandia National Laboratory, the Air Force Research Laboratory, the New Mexico Supercomputer facility, and Spaceport America.

Dr. Burton reported on the first NASA EPSCoR (Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research) grant in New Mexico for the Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering Department. The grant was awarded to develop methods for structural health monitoring (SHM) and self-healing materials. A strong SHM collaboration has been developed with the world class group of SHM researchers at Los Alamos National Lab. A research group led by Nancy Chanover in Astronomy was awarded NMSU's second NASA EPSCoR grant to develop space exploration instrumentation for in situ organic detection. Significant DoD, NSF and other funding has been awarded for space and aerospace-related research. The new Aerospace Engineering program at NMSU will benefit from and will complement these competitive research programs.
